Chicago Tribune

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 25, 1996

A real page-turner: In celebration of Briar Glen School's 25th anniversary, teachers and parents created the Million Minute Man last August to entice the Wheaton grade school's 500 students to read collectively a million minutes at home. When they reached a million, the Million Minute Man, otherwise known as school principal Larry Jones, would put his desk on the rooftop and conduct business from there for a day.

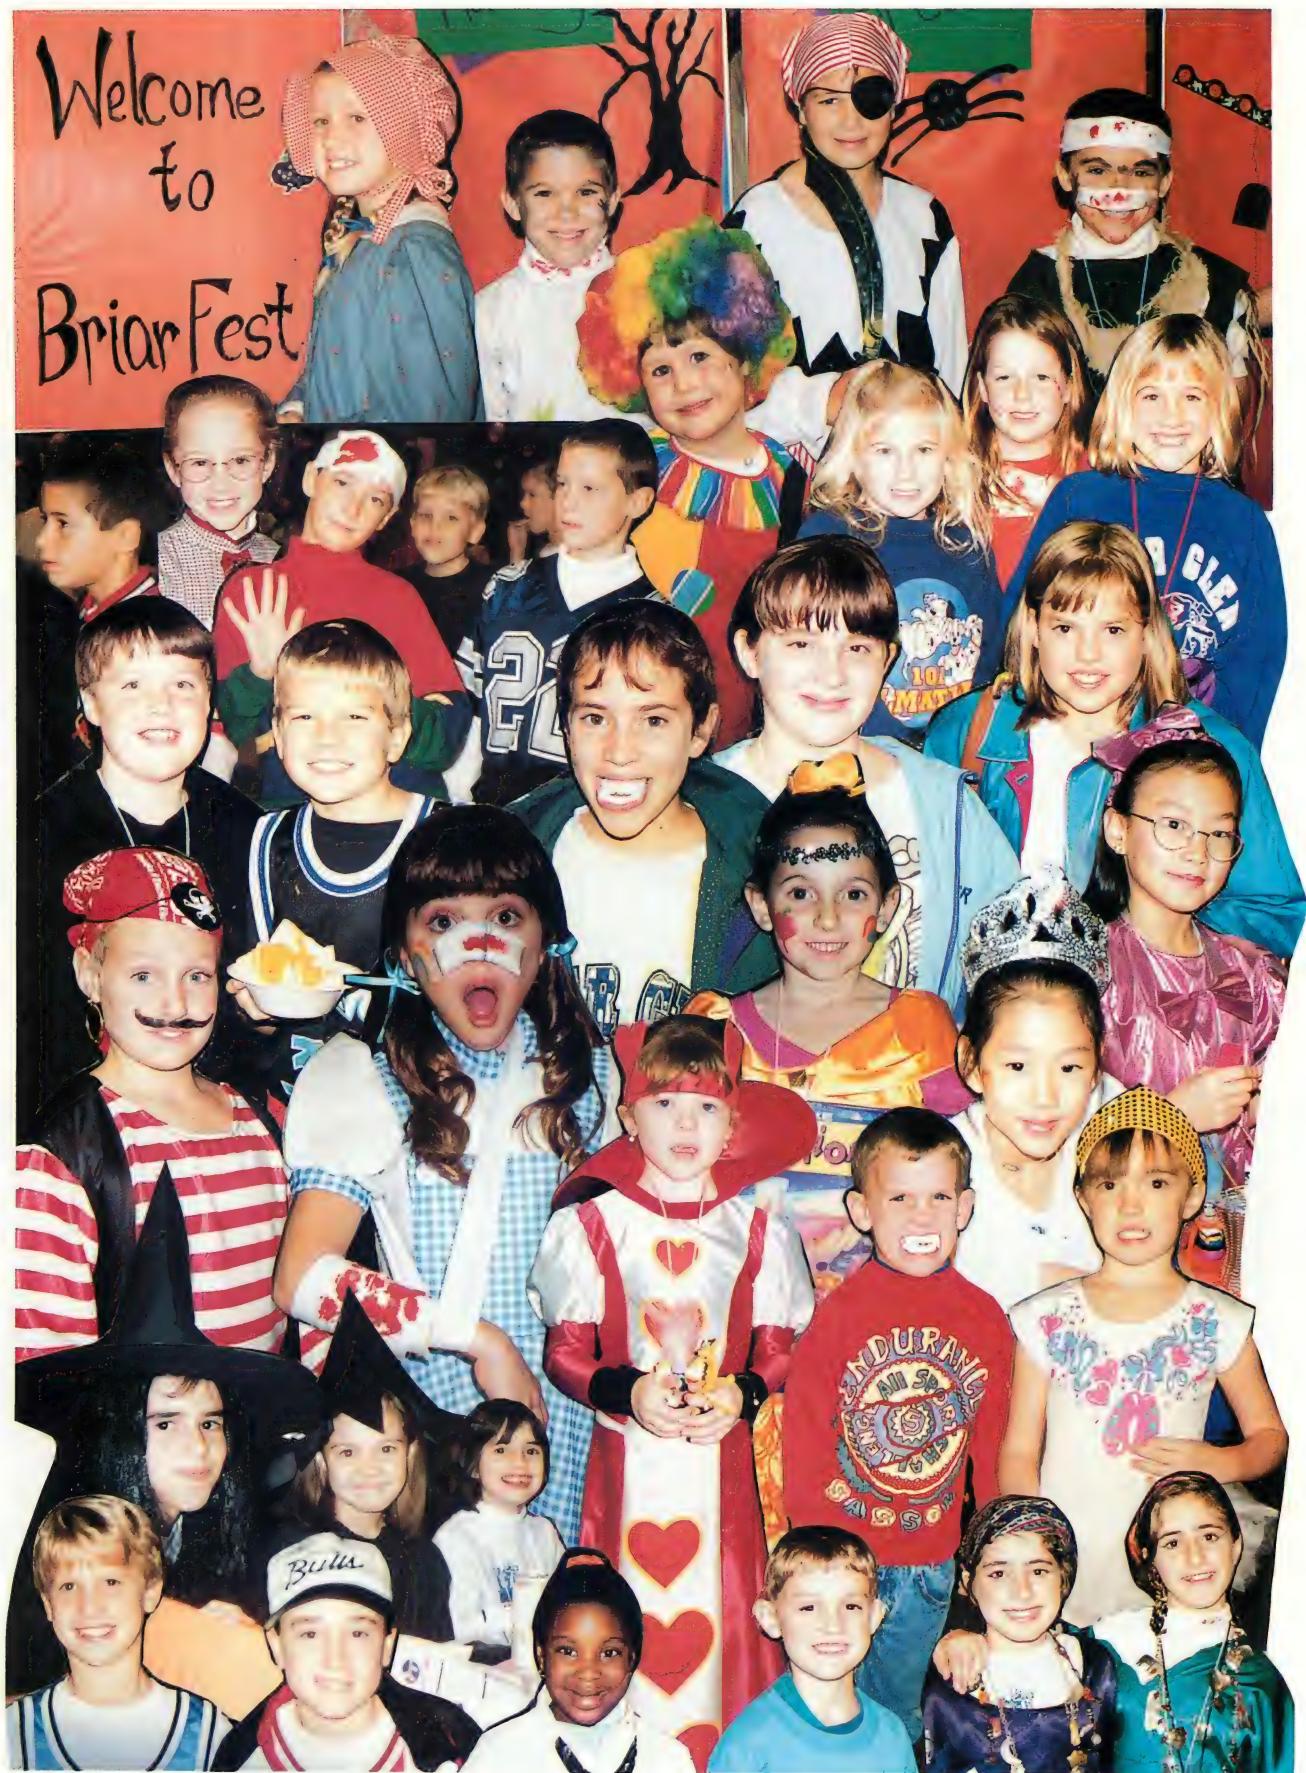

"They all thought it would be in April or May when they reached a million," Jones said.

But reading has always been strongly emphasized at Briar Glen, and the day came early—on Jan. 18. The principal will, indeed, work with his head in the clouds, but it will have to wait for warmer weather.

The reward for waiting? Students will gather around the school, and this time the Million Minute Man will read to them.

Do animals have a lot of food?
Do our farmers grow so much wheat?
Our farmers have so much land.
How do the farmers stay alive?
Do farmers keep animals around?
Who are these people on the page?
They are there some old brick farmhouses.
Farmers have a house like ours.
There are a lot of trees on the page.
Do they have the food they grow?
Not all farms are the same.

Do all farmers have good land?
Do they have to travel to harvest the crops?
What do they eat for breakfast?
What do they feed their animals?
How long does it take to grow the crops?
Do they have backyards?
What do they do in the winter?
Who are these people on the page?
Do they work and eat the animals?
